WTO's Institute for Training and Technical Co-operation (ITTC) is progressively introducing results-based management approaches to the monitoring and evaluation of WTO's trade-related technical assistance activities.

As part of its work programme for 2011, the Standards and Trade Development Facility (STDF) has been working on methodological approaches to monitoring and evaluation of SPS-related technical assistance, including pilot projects on SPS indicators to measure the performance of national SPS systems and the use of economic analysis to inform decision-making on SPS capacity building.

The new approach sequences WTO's learning products in order to improve the delivery of TRTA, with a view to gradually and progressively moving to higher levels of learning. A major effort is also being deployed to reposition eTraining within the means of delivery of TRTA which permeates all other product.

The STDF's Medium Term Strategy (2007-11) places particular emphasis on the STDF acting as a forum for coordination and a reference point for good practice in the supply and receipt of SPS-related technical cooperation

Collaboration with the Multilateral and Regional Development Banks to enhance the dialogue and involvement of the private sector of the prioritisation and delivery of Aid for Trade, including showcasing the benefits of public private partnerships in Aid for Trade. Particular work has been done with the African Development Bank on increasing the voice of the African private sector in trade issues.

We have worked closely with the International Trade Centre on its Aid for Trade related work on the private sector including the mapping of needs, priorities and impacts of Aid-for-Trade interventions.

Through partnership with the Regional Development Banks, have sought to include the private sector in the regional training events held in preparation for the third Global Review of Aid for Trade.

Actively consulted with private sector actors to gather their views on Aid for Trade through their presentation of case stories for the third Global Review

Aid for Trade activities:

The STDF, in collaboration with the Dutch Ministry of Agriculture, Nature and Food Quality (now the Ministry of Economic Affairs, Agriculture and Innovation) and the World Bank Institute, organized an international workshop on the role of Public-Private Partnerships (PPPs) in support of sanitary and phytosanitary (SPS) capacity, in the Hague, The Netherlands from 4-5 October 2010. Representatives from the private sector (Multinational Companies, as well as enterprises and private sector associations from developing countries, participated actively and shared their experiences).

ITTC is pursuing outreach programmes, including work with parliamentarians, private sector, academics and Universities. This includes efforts to enhance coordination in academic cooperation, by concentrating support from the WTO to academic courses, research activities, academic networking and public outreach. Private sector has been invited to attend and to participate in most of the activities conducted and organised by the Regional Desks of ITTC.

Several STDF activities (including action-oriented research on National SPS Coordination Mechanisms, use of economic analysis to informal SPS decision-making etc.) involve academic and research institutions in some developing countries (e.g. Ghana, Thailand, Vietnam) that benefit from STDF project funding and/or are involved in project implementation.

The ITTC launched the Global Technical Assistance Database in 2010. The objective of GTAD is to be the portal for the exchange and sharing of information between partner agencies on the future execution of TRTA activities. The GTAD is an interactive tool, which takes into account national and regional projects, as well as training courses of a global nature. The GTAD is forward looking and the period of coverage starts in January 2010.

The STDF is a coordination and resource mobilization mechanism bringing together the main international organisations involved in SPS capacity building, as well as donors and other relevant organisations. It acts as a forum for information sharing on SPS-related technical cooperation activities. It also aims to mobilize resources to address SPS issues which limit the trading possibilities of developing countries and so better protect human, animal and plant health from SPS risks. As such, the STDF provides a concrete mechanism to promote harmonization and synergies in SPS technical co-operation.

Please elaborate with examples: Aid for Trade activities Mindful of the demand-driven nature of the WTO Secretariat's trade capacity-building programmes, the biennial TA Plan 2010-2011 (the TA Plan) was prepared in close cooperation with the main stakeholders, i.e. beneficiaries and donors, and builds on lessons learned from the implementation of the first biennial Plan. A series of consultations were conducted during the Spring and early Summer of 2009 with all regional groupings, and with individual Members, to get as much feedback as possible on the specific needs and requirements for trade capacity-building. Effective cooperation with regional partner institutions continues to be a priority for the ITTC with a view to seeking out strategies for enhancing cooperation and relationships. Such cooperation is an integral part of the planning of both national and regional seminars, but is equally of critical importance in the programming of the regional trade policy courses, as well as the design and delivery of activities with the academia, so as to enhance ownership of the programmes. In 2010, the Secretariat circulated draft DTIS documents prepared for the Democratic Republic of Congo, Guinea Bissau, Timor Leste and Togo to the Working Group and forwarded comments to the EIF Secretariat. • Lessons learned from the EIF monitoring framework were taken into account in the STDF/OECD working paper on SPS indicators. • One project developed by the STDF through a project preparation grant (STDF/PPG/113, Burundi) was reformulated as a Tier 2 project with the assistance of UNIDO for onward submission to the EIF. One proposal (STDF/PG/302, Senegal) was approved by the Working Group in March 2010 for co-funding with the EIF. The STDF is also working closely with regional organizations, notably in Africa. In 2010, the STDF funded the preparation of a scoping study, conducted at the request of the African Union Commission (AUC), in a first attempt to identify and assess regional SPS policy frameworks and strategies in Africa and guide future work in this area.

13.2 Please provide examples and describe your experience with monitoring your aid-for-trade programmes:

Aid for Trade initiative

One of the innovations of the Monitoring and Evaluation Framework for the Aft initiative has been the launch of a call for case stories. In mid-February 2011, nearly 230 case stories had been submitted. The case stories will serve as a tool to showcase the partner voice in the evaluation of the outcomes and impact of Aid for Trade. This is a bottom-up approach which ensures that the voice of the developing countries, including the LDCs, on how Aid for Trade is working or is not working can be incorporated in the analysis for the third Global Review. The case stories are an important qualitative step in improving the monitoring and evaluation framework with a focus on lessons learned and intra-regional sharing of experiences.

Aid for Trade activities

The ITTC systematically monitors the delivery and results of WTO's TRTA activities. Monitoring functions are assured by tracking participants' evaluations of activities and systematic oversight by the Technical Assistance Audit (TCA) office, in tandem with the WTO's Technical Assistance Management Committee. Overall oversight is assured by the WTO Committee on Trade and Development.

Implementation of the 2010-11 TA plan has resulted in the more systematic application of evaluation processes, notably at the design phase of activities. This has improved the quality of reporting and ensured that results achieved are measurable and recommended follow-up actions easier to identify. The role and function of TCA has also been strengthened with ex-post evaluations of TA activities carried out on the basis of on-site survey with partner countries.

The WTO is currently in the first phase of the implementation of results-based management approaches to its TRTA activities.

An independent evaluation of the STDF was conducted in 2008:

http://www.standardsfacility.org/Files/KeyDocs/STDF_248_Evaluation_Report_2008.pdf

The STDF has developed three main streams of work related to Results-based management since 2008, specifically: (i) action-oriented research, consultations and pilot testing to identify indicators to measure SPS performance at the country level; (ii) efforts to strengthen the application of RBM within projects financed by the STDF; and (iii) application of RBM to the STDF programme as a whole.

The STDF/OECD work on indicators to measure the performance of a national SPS system aims: (i) to sensitize the SPS community about the importance of managing for results and, more specifically, about the value and role of indicators; and (ii) to promote the use of indicators within results-based management frameworks for national SPS systems.

The STDF encourages the development and use of monitoring and evaluation systems within its projects. Applicants are required to develop logical frameworks – and indicators to measure progress – as an integral part of the project proposal. Independent ex-post evaluations of STDF projects are systematically undertaken (copies of evaluation reports are available on the STDF website: <http://www.standardsfacility.org>)

The STDF Secretariat has taken steps to apply RBM to the STDF programme as a whole. A logical framework was developed as part of the STDF Operational Plan for 2010-11 and the Secretariat reports on this activities in this context.
