

Carmel Cahill

Deputy Director, Trade and Agriculture Directorate, OECD

Carmel Cahill is Deputy Director in OECD's Directorate for Trade and Agriculture where she is responsible for a wide range of strategic planning, coordination and communication activities covering food, agriculture and international trade issues. During her career at OECD she has led an international team of economists and policy analysts on a broad range of domestic and international policy issues relating to food and agriculture; food security and price volatility; measurement and evaluation of support and protection levels; impacts of domestic and trade policy reform; decoupling; multifunctionality; and structural adjustment issues. She holds B. A. and Master of Arts degrees in Economics from University College, Cork and a Master of Science degree in Statistics from Trinity College, Dublin.