

Carol Guthrie
Head of Public Affairs and Media

OECD

Carol Guthrie is the Head of Public Affairs and Media at the OECD, where she leads a team seeking to better connect the OECD's unique research and best practices perspectives with policymakers and stakeholders around the world through direct engagement and through traditional and new communications channels.

Before joining the OECD in 2014 as head of the Organisation's Washington Centre, Guthrie served for five years as the Assistant U.S. Trade Representative for Public and Media Affairs in the Administration of President Barack Obama. Prior, she was the Communications Director for the U.S. Senate Committee on Finance, covering a wide range of issues including, domestic and international tax policy, trade, health care, and entitlement programs. Ms Guthrie also previously served as the Communications Director and speechwriter for U.S. Senator Ron Wyden of Oregon. Before her career in government, Guthrie spent seven years as a television news producer for multiple network affiliate outlets in Washington DC, Baltimore, and Birmingham. AL.
