Kaley joined IEEP in October 2007 and is Senior Fellow in the Agriculture and Land Management programme at the Institute for European Environmental Policy (IEEP). She specialises in European policies which impact on the rural environment and the implementation and environmental and climate impacts of these policies in different parts of the EU. She is actively involved in the debates surrounding the future of the Common Agricultural Policy and the coherence of policies to achieve sustainable land use with a longer term perspective. Prior to joining the Institute she worked at Natural England and the Countryside Agency as a Senior Specialist on land management policy, the Campaign to Protect Rural England (CPRE) and as a researcher at Kings College and Wye College, University of London.
