

Olaf Foss is a sociologist, Research Director at the Norwegian Institute for Urban and Regional Research (NIBR), and Head of the Division for Socio-Economic and Territorial Studies at the institute. He has been active in rural and regional research since the 1970s and his publications are covering issues like regional division of labour, gender relations, regional demography and migration, employment and the labour market, industrial development and firm localization, public services and policies, territorial impact assessment. He has been editor of NIBR's biannual journal "Regionale trender" ("Regional Trends") 1988-2010. He has also been Research Coordinator/Research Manager for two broad research programs on regional development at the Norwegian Research Council. Foss is acting as national ESPON Contact Point in Norway (continuously since 2002) and has been/is partner to several ESPON projects. He is also involved in territorial research outside Europe."