Promoting the Busan Building Block on Climate Finance and Development Effectiveness

Civil society voices for BetterAid

At the Fourth High Level Forum on Aid Effectiveness in Busan (2011) a high level panel moderated by UNDP Administrator, Helen Clark, reached consensus that international climate finance should be channeled through and aligned with country led strategies and systems. At this time, partners launched the Busan Building Block (BBB) on Climate Change Finance and Development Effectiveness.

Twenty seven countries and institutions are officially supporting this partnership with the purpose of promoting coherence and collaboration across the climate change and development communities at all levels. A fundamental premise is that climate change and development are intrinsically linked and that climate finance should be informed by the experience of past efforts to improve the effectiveness of aid to promote development.

A year on from Busan there is a need to report back on early results of the partnership and enhance the added value that it can bring through further dialogue and consultation.

- To present the early results of studies and actions aiming to implement the goals of the BBB on Climate Change Finance and Development Effectiveness
- To discuss the challenges, opportunities and lessons learnt in linking climate finance and development effectiveness goals, and to seek ideas from all stakeholders on how further strengthen the partnership.
