

Jeffrey BROWN manages projects on the future of work and artificial intelligence at the Bertelsmann Foundation in Washington. His research focuses on the implications of automation and AI on geopolitics and labor, particularly in regard to the United States and the European Union. He is currently working with the National Association of Workforce Boards to develop and highlight local responses and strategies to the future of work in the United States and Europe.