

Measuring Well-Being for Development and Policy Making 16-19 October 2012

For nearly a decade the OECD has led international reflection on the measurement of well-being and progress, principally through three world fora held in Palermo, Italy in 2004, Istanbul, Turkey in 2007 and Busan, Korea in 2009. These events have helped to develop a shared sense of common purpose and direction among the many agencies active in developing more relevant statistics on well-being and progress.

In May last year, on the occasion of the Organisation's 50th Anniversary, the OECD Secretary-General launched the OECD Better Life Initiative. This Initiative, through the How's Life? report and its associated Your Better Life Index (BLI), proposes a framework that gives a more comprehensive picture of what matters in people's lives. The Better Life Initiative framework, inspired by the recommendations in the Stiglitz-Sen-Fitoussi report and the many on-going national initiatives to measure well-being and societal progress, includes eleven dimensions of material conditions and quality of life and focuses on outcomes – both averages and across population groups. It also looks at our imprint today on a range of resources that will shape well-being in the future. In May this year, the BLI was updated to reflect improvements to the index and to enable comparisons by gender and income inequality. This framework is potentially relevant for all countries around the world. Indeed, in a recent resolution, the UN General Assembly called for a "more holistic approach to development", putting the notion of well-being and sustainability at the core of the reflections on the design of goals and indicators after 2015.

On 16-19 October 2012, the OECD will organise, jointly with the Government of India, the 4th OECD World Forum on Statistics, Knowledge and Policy under the theme "Measuring Well-Being for Development and Policy Making". Building on the Better Life Initiative, the main objectives of the Forum are to further the discussions on the different aspects that make for a good life today and in the future in different countries of the world, and to promote the development and use of new measures of well-being for effective and accountable policy making. Thus, an important expected outcome of the Forum is to contribute to the post-2015 development agenda.

The Forum agenda has been designed to reflect the conclusions of four regional conferences on Measuring Well-Being and Fostering the Progress of Societies that the OECD has organised in association with the OECD Development Centre, PARIS21 and regional actors. These events, for Latin-America (held in Mexico City), for Asia-Pacific (held in Tokyo), for Africa (held in Rabat) and for Europe (held in Paris) took place in May 2011, December 2011, April 2012 and June 2012 respectively.

The four-day Forum will gather around 800 participants from all over the world, including policy-makers as well as representatives from international organisations, national statistical offices, government agencies, academia and civil society. It will include a combination of keynote addresses, round tables and themed sessions on material conditions; quality of life; gender, minorities & life course perspectives; and sustainability. Each themed session will be organised around parallel sub-themed sessions involving speakers from different horizons.
